Thank you for your letter of 25 January. I can understand your concern for what you perceived was a lack of appreciation for your mother's efforts in the creation of a design for an Office of Personnel logo.

When the Director of Personnel proposed a logo for his office, an advertising firm initially drew up designs. Because employees were not completely satisfied with these, the Director of Personnel informally offered employees an opportunity to submit additional designs if they so desired. As a result, several new designs were created; and your mother's was the one selected. A special announcement was made at the Director of Personnel's staff meeting in recognition of your mother's creation and the adoption of her design. In addition, her important contribution will be acknowledged in her next annual evaluation. Having reviewed the matter, I concur with the Director of Personnel that further formal Agency recognition would not be appropriate. This certainly should not be interpreted as any lack of appreciation for your mother's contribution.

I was gratified to know of your mother's efforts in the design of this logo. This kind of extra effort certainly helps us on the road in our quest for excellence.

Sincerely,

/s/ William J. Casey
